locations where the University business is conducted. This prohibition applies to employees and to non-university organizations, commercial enterprises, and individuals. Employees are encouraged to report such solicitations to the appropriate campus-based individual, or a designee, listed in I.(A.) above.

III. Solicitations for Charitable Purposes

- A. Universitywide solicitations for charitable purposes are prohibited, with the exception of university-sponsored programs such as the Rutgers University Foundation, the University Condolence Fund, and the Employees' Combined Charities Campaign.
- B. Except as expressly authorized, the University does not permit solicitations for charitable purposes by telephone, mail, email, in person, or through some other means at University facilities where University business is conducted. However, directors, department heads, and department chairs may permit workplace solicitations (for charitable purposes) by an employee within that employee's work unit so long as the activity does not interfere with or compromise the operations of the work unit.
- C. For more information on charitable solicitations, see University Policy section 20.1.15: Charitable Contributions and Expending University Funds Related to Charitable Causes.
