10.1.7 RUTGERS UNIVERSITY PRESS

- A. The Rutgers University Press is a division of Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey. The Press shall publish books of academic merit or distinction that serve the needs and reflect the values of the scholarly community at large, and it shall also publish works of general interest to the citizens of the State and region.
- B. The Rutgers University Press is responsible to the President of the University through the Executive Vice President for Academic Affairs. Under the President, the overall responsibility for the Press, including management, finance, and publishing policy, is delegated to the Press Council, which shall develop its own bylaws and rules of procedure, subject to review and approval by the President.
- C. There shall be a Director of the Rutgers University Press appointed by the President who, with the advice of the Press Council, shall manage the Press within the available financial resources in the best interests of Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, and the world of scholarship and learning. As the chief administrative officer of an academic-support division of Rutgers University, the Director shall be bound by appropriate University Regulations.
